

FORADORA INSURANCE

March 2010

Volume 3, Number 3

March springs pleasant thoughts of nicer days and warmer weather...unfortunately the rain and snow presents a potential problem.

While warmer days provide a pleasing atmosphere both in the home as well as the community they can also present adverse troubles for homeowners. Fall and spring generally prove to be the wettest seasons placing homes at risk of sewer and drainage problems.

It is important for homeowners to realize that not all homeowners insurance policies cover every circumstance related to sewer and drainage problems.

Heavy rains combined with situations, such as snow melt, can create an opportunity for sewer and drain lines to backup. Drain and sewage systems unfortunately provide little warning prior to backing up. This situation can be very unpleasant for homeowners.

Water damage can have a very harmful effect on a homeowners budget. Sewer and drainage problems generally are concentrated within the lower level or basement of the home. Considering that many basements within the home contain key machinery like a washer/dryer, hot water tank, electrical box, & furnace, including coverage is critical should a problem occur.
